Eyes on the Farm Answer Key

(Sample Responses)

1. Third-person omniscient - The narrator knows and reports the thoughts, actions, and experiences of multiple characters.
2. The neutral tone makes the events sound factual, which increases the impact of the shocking actions because they are presented without exaggeration.
3. Orwell likely chose a detached narrator so that readers could see the broader political allegory, not just one character's experience.
4. Example: When the narrator describes the pigs altering the commandments, it is reported simply as fact. This forces readers to recognize the manipulation themselves rather than being told what to think.
5. Because the narrator doesn't challenge Squealer's words directly, readers see how propaganda works on the animals, making it more realistic and disturbing.
