A Day in Mumbai

Arun woke up to the sounds of honking cars and busy voices drifting through the window of his apartment in Mumbai. The sun was already bright, and the warm air carried the smell of street food being cooked for early customers. After getting ready for school, Arun and his mother walked past fruit stalls stacked with colorful mangoes and papayas. Vendors were setting up their carts, calling out friendly greetings to people passing by.

On the way to school, Arun crossed a crowded street where buses, bicycles, and scooters all moved together. Tall buildings stood next to older homes, showing how modern and traditional parts of the city blend together. At lunchtime, Arun and his classmates ate rice and vegetables in the school courtyard while crows perched on nearby trees.

After school, Arun met his friends near the seafront. They watched fishing boats return to the harbor as the wind carried the salty smell of the ocean. As evening arrived, the city lights began to glow, and the streets filled again with people heading home. Arun and his family ended the day by sharing a simple dinner and talking about what tomorrow might bring in their busy, colorful city.
