The Case of the Vanishing Voices

(Completed Version with Answers)

Detective Lila Storm arrived at the zoo just after dawn. The head zookeeper looked pale. "It's strange," he said, "an entire flock of parrots is missing!"

Lila scribbled notes in her journal as she passed a group of flamingos quietly standing near the pond. She continued down the path and stopped beside a troop of chimpanzees who were curiously watching her every move.

Just then, a loud buzz came from above—a swarm of bees hovered near the treetops. Lila ducked under a branch and nearly tripped over a colony of turtles sunbathing on the path.

At the tiger enclosure, she saw a pride of tigers lounging in the shade—silent and majestic. Near the café, a bunch of tourists chatted loudly, completely unaware of the morning's mystery.

Suddenly, a call came through her walkie-talkie. "Detective Storm, we've found something! A pack of feathers was discovered near the maintenance gate."

She rushed to the scene, passing a group of zebras calmly munching grass. The clue was undeniable. Someone had snuck in during the night. A quick check of security footage revealed a gang of thieves making off with a large cage—now empty.

Thanks to the clues, Detective Storm knew just where to go.
