Travel Blog Takeover: Fact or Feeling?

Instructions: Below is an excerpt from a travel blog post written by a student named Layla. She mixes her personal thoughts with actual information about her trip. Your job is to read carefully and mark each sentence based on whether it is a FACT or an OPINION.

Layla's Travel Blog: "Wandering Through Washington, D.C."

Last week, I visited Washington, D.C., the capital of the United States.

The city is home to famous landmarks like the White House and the Lincoln Memorial.

I think the Lincoln Memorial is the most powerful monument I've ever seen.

It was built to honor Abraham Lincoln, who was the 16th president.

The Reflecting Pool nearby made the whole area feel peaceful and magical.

There are over 70 museums in Washington, D.C., including the Smithsonian museums.

The Air and Space Museum was way cooler than I expected.

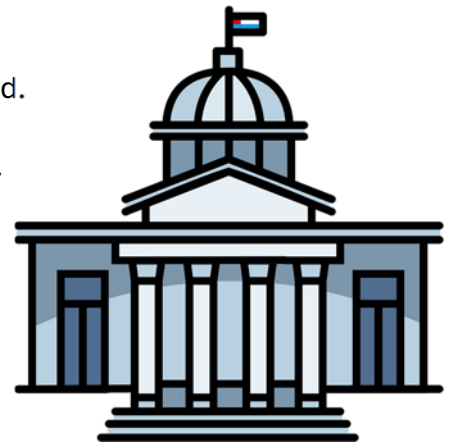

I learned that Neil Armstrong walked on the Moon in 1969.

In my opinion, space travel is the most exciting thing ever discovered.

We also saw the Washington Monument, which is over 550 feet tall.

It's honestly too tall—just looking at it made my neck hurt!

I could spend a whole week in D.C. and still not see everything.
