French People Patterns

Directions: Read each reflection prompt about human geography in France. Answer in complete sentences using thoughtful explanations.

1. France has experienced internal migration from rural areas to large cities. What factors might encourage people to move from the countryside to places like Paris, Lyon, or Marseille?
2. France is home to several cultural regions such as Brittany, Provence, and Alsace. How do unique languages, foods, or traditions help shape the identity of these regions?
3. Many people arrive in France from other parts of Europe, Africa, and Asia. How might international migration influence French culture, economy, and daily life?
4. Urbanization has created densely populated areas around major cities. What challenges and opportunities can come from living in a highly urbanized region?
5. How might the mix of rural towns, industrial areas, and modern cities affect the way people experience everyday life in France?
6. Choose one cultural region of France. Explain how geography, history, or language makes it different from other parts of the country.
7. In your opinion, how does movement of people shape France's national identity? Explain your thinking with examples.
8. Based on the prompts above, write one personal prediction about how human geography in France might change in the future.
