Article A - AI in the Classroom: A Balanced View

Artificial intelligence tools are making their way into schools worldwide. They can grade essays, track student progress, and even adapt lessons to different learning styles. Yet experts warn about challenges such as over-reliance on machines and concerns over student privacy. Understanding both the potential benefits and the risks is essential for teachers and policymakers.

Article B - Why AI Will Revolutionize Learning

Imagine a world where no student is left behind because every lesson is customized perfectly. Artificial intelligence makes this vision possible. With AI, teachers can focus more on inspiring students while machines handle the repetitive work. Critics may hesitate, but the truth is clear: AI is the future of education, and schools must adopt it quickly to avoid falling behind.

Article C - AI Goes to School: A Satirical Take

If robots keep learning at this pace, soon they'll be the ones assigning us homework. Imagine asking your AI tutor for help, only to have it sigh dramatically and say, "Didn't we go over this yesterday?" While some people worry about job loss or surveillance, maybe we should be more concerned about robots developing teenage attitudes. At least they won't ask for a hall pass.
