The classroom grew hot and stuffy as the sun poured through the tall windows. A few students fanned themselves with notebooks, but the air hardly moved. Finally, Mr. Harris walked to the back of the room and pushed open the heavy wooden door. At once, a strong breeze swept inside, scattering loose papers across desks. Several students scrambled to grab their assignments before they flew to the floor. Laughter filled the room as a worksheet sailed like a kite above the teacher's head. The cool air quickly refreshed everyone, and the class settled back into their work with smiles.
