- H. A single kind act can make a big difference for someone else.

_____ 1. Omar borrowed his cousin's video game without asking. At first, he felt excited as he played, but soon the disc scratched, and the game froze. When his cousin found out, she was disappointed and upset. Omar admitted what he had done and apologized. Though his cousin forgave him, she reminded him that trust is easily broken. Omar promised never to take something without permission again.

_____ 2. Sienna's soccer team lost three games in a row. Some teammates wanted to give up, but Sienna encouraged them to keep practicing. She organized extra drills after school and pushed herself to improve her passing. At their next match, the team worked together better than ever before. They didn't win the championship, but they did score and played with confidence. Everyone realized they were stronger because they hadn't quit.

_____ 3. Elena noticed a new student sitting alone at lunch every day. Most kids ignored him, but Elena walked over and asked if he wanted to join her table. Soon, other students welcomed him too, and the new student began to smile more. Elena realized that one small act of kindness could make a big difference in someone's life.

_____ 4. Jayden loved playing on his tablet more than anything else. He ignored his homework, chores, and even missed dinner a few times because he was too focused on his games. Soon, his grades dropped, and his parents took the tablet away until he could show responsibility. Jayden realized that too much of a good thing could cause problems, and he started balancing his time better.
