Exit Slip: Making Predictions

Good readers don't stop thinking when the chapter ends. They use what already happened: characters' actions, problems, and clues, to predict what might happen next. An exit slip is a short written response at the end of class to show your thinking.

Passage Recap (Chapter Ending)

Lila finally reached the top of the hill, where the old lighthouse stood. She pushed open the heavy wooden door and stepped inside. The beam of her flashlight revealed a spiral staircase, twisting upward into the dark.

At the end of today's reading, write a short response (3-4 sentences):

1. What do you predict will happen in the next chapter?

2. What text clues from the ending help you make this prediction?

3. Why does this prediction make sense for the story's direction?
