

Same Question, Different Vibes Sample Answer Key

1. How is the tone different between the short and long responses?

The short response is simple and casual, almost like something you'd tell a friend. The long response sounds more professional and academic, with vocabulary suited for a science magazine.

2. How is the structure of the two responses different?

The short response is only two short sentences and does not expand on any one idea. The long response is a full paragraph with multiple sentences, each adding a new piece of information in an organized way.

3. Which response provides more detail, and what examples show this?

The long response provides more detail. It explains dolphin intelligence, how they communicate (clicks, whistles, body movements), and where they live (oceans, pods). The short response only says dolphins are smart, fast, and friendly.

4. Which response would be more useful for a school assignment, and why?

The long response would be more useful because it includes specific facts, uses academic language, and is structured like a real informational paragraph.

5. What does this comparison teach you about when to use a short prompt vs. a long prompt?

It shows that short prompts are better for quick, general answers, while long prompts are needed when you want structured, detailed, and professional responses.
