Directions: Read the passage. Rewrite it at seventy-five percent, then fifty percent, then twenty-five percent of its length using the guide.

In many parts of the world, students travel to school in very different ways depending on where they live and what resources are available. Some students walk along dirt paths through farms or villages, while others ride buses through crowded city streets. In colder regions, students may wear heavy coats and boots as they travel through snow. In warmer climates, students might walk under the hot sun or ride bicycles through dusty roads. Even though their journeys look different, students everywhere share the same goal of learning and building their future.

- Seventy five percent: Keep all main ideas. Remove examples and extra description.
- Fifty percent: Keep only the most important ideas. Combine similar points.
- Twenty five percent: Keep only the single strongest main idea.
