During a weeklong summer camp, siblings Nora and Jordan signed up for the nighttime astronomy challenge. Each group of campers had to locate three constellations using a star map and a small telescope. On the final night, clouds covered the sky, and many teams gave up. Nora and Jordan decided to hike to the ridge above the lake, hoping for clearer skies. When they reached the top, the wind pushed the clouds aside just long enough for them to spot all three constellations. They hurried back to camp with their completed chart, arriving moments before the challenge ended.
