Ms. Rivera's class had to make a poster for the school's "Kindness Fair." At first, everyone tried to work alone. Jason wanted to draw the title, but Lily started coloring over his letters. Mia tried to glue pictures, but she couldn't find space because everyone was doing their own thing. The poster looked messy, and nobody was happy.

Ms. Rivera reminded them, "Working together means sharing jobs." The students decided to make a plan. Jason would draw, Lily would color, and Mia would glue the pictures after they all agreed on where things should go. When they finished, the poster looked bright and neat. The class felt proud because everyone had a part in making it great.
